

Home

Videos

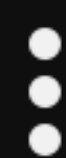

Playlists

Posts

MrMcclaughry

2 hours ago (edited)

On the evening of July 9, 2024 10:32PM PST - my wife and I were 'treated' to a Death Announcement posting about the earlier that evening death of our child by cardiac arrest. This posting was complete with a photo of someone that is verifiably not our child, along with other glaring and provably false information. Redacted image (for now) of posting is below.

That included photo was first presented much earlier in time than July 9, through our child's known to be compromised (and in use by others) Twitter account. Screenshot proof is in our possession.

Shame on Dana Whitmire @rottingjewels for not only refusing more than once to help us expose and document what really happened to our child, but also for mocking my wife's posts here about it. Her behavior, including the extortionary actions of publishing all of she and my wife's private communications, her blatantly heartless disrespect of myself, my wife and our child's fight for her life, her lying about my wife being a "former Scientology spook", is all so beyond disgusting, it's literally straight out of hell.

  is with  and 2 others. ·
July 9, 2024 ·

With profound sadness, I share that my sister has lost her battle with cancer last week ago with pneumonitis, and despite our hopes, her condition

Home

Videos

Playlists

Posts

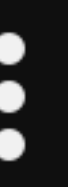

ner lying about my wife being a "former Scientology spook", is all so beyond disgusting, it's literally straight out of hell.

██████████ is with ██████████ and 2 others. · ██████████

July 9, 2024 · ██████████

With profound sadness, I share that my sister has lost her battle with cancer a week ago with pneumonitis, and despite our hopes, her condition

MrMcclaughry

6 hours ago (edited)

Introducing Loren Spethman on Christianity and Scientology -

First thing that comes to mind is responding to Dana's @rottingjewels positioning of my religious beliefs "like Mappin" as if that is somehow meaningful to the discussion of Christianity or Scientology.

The opining of one Christian as to the "fitness" of another Christian ... is something that I have witnessed many times over my entire life. I do not and will not enter into a contest to prove I am a better Christian than anyone else. I have criticized some practices of Christians that have a record of killing those that disagree with their religious views. Those who use threats of violence to intimidate others because they don't agree with their beliefs, are not a friend of mine either. No two individuals have identical beliefs. This means that all have at least in some part different beliefs than all others.

How much difference does there have to be and who decides whether or not someone is good enough to meet God's standard of what a Christian has to do to be accepted as Christian. This isn't any man or woman's job to judge Christians as to worthiness to be accepted by Jesus. When I hear someone opining as to the fitness of another in their acceptableness to God ... various scripture come to mind that I use to stop me from reversing the same criticalness back.

some part different better than all others.

How much difference does there have to be and who decides whether or not someone is good enough to meet God's standard of what a Christian has to do to be accepted as Christian. This isn't any man or woman's job to judge Christians as to worthiness to be accepted by Jesus. When I hear someone opining as to the fitness of another in their acceptableness to God ... various scripture come to mind that I use to stop me from reversing the same criticalness back. Quoting scriptures could be viewed in a lesson in Christianity ... preaching so to speak ... to start quoting scriptures, however, I feel that if I was doing something as stupid as believing that I could predict God's mind without error, then there is something bigger than my own or any individual well-being at stake.

The Bible is considered the Word of God and standard by which Christianity goes forward in the future by most Christians. Not all but most. I don't know Dana's full beliefs and practices. I don't want to know Dana's @rottingjewels full beliefs and practices. She doesn't answer to me, and I am not her judge.

She isn't my judge either in spite of her public positioning of me with John Mappin (like John Mappin). I have had my experiences with cults. That a Christian is somehow less because of some life experiences ... that is shaky ground to be using as a disqualification of another Christian.

All have sinned and therefore fallen short on God's

All have sinned and therefore fallen short on God's standards. Sin being missing the mark or going sideways from God's will. Hence to avoid the massive slaughter of blood that was occurring under what is termed now as the old covenant, the new covenant had the blood of Christ shed once for the remission of sin. This is the basis of Christian belief as I understand it.

Doesn't mean all people who call themselves Christian believe this, but I haven't run into any that haven't.

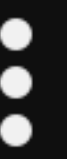

The blood of Christ and the shedding of it on the "stauros" (cross) is the power and whole point of "Christianity". For anyone to limit this power to only their own belief ... is just odd to me when I think about these statements of "I am holier than thou" because you don't meet my standards. I am not at all trying to meet Dana's standards. There is only one whom I have to answer to as to his contribution to healing by willingly being killed because of those who later claim his blood as their source of power.

Jesus is the example, not Mappin, Dana, Pope, preacher, priest, or any other.

As you understand Jesus, that should be how you live your life if you are following Jesus Christ. That any Christian would condemn any other Christian in the stead of Jesus - as if Jesus somehow needs their help - is usurping Jesus's right to make the decision for Himself.

Post

who later claim his blood as their source of power.

Jesus is the example, not Mappin, Dana, Pope, preacher, priest, or any other.

As you understand Jesus, that should be how you live your life if you are following Jesus Christ. That any Christian would condemn any other Christian in the stead of Jesus - as if Jesus somehow needs their help - is usurping Jesus's right to make the decision for Himself.

That is the way I view the subject of one Christian being critical of another Christian.

See this post for background: <https://www.youtube.com/post/Ugkxnt9J...>

2

MrMcclaughry
2.23K subscribers

SUBSCRIBE